The Sycamore Kitchen Opens on La Brea

Breakfast (and lunch) of champions

The Hatfields versus the McCoy's? We know which side we're on.

Though no relation to the feuding clan, Karen and Quinn Hatfield won our undying loyalty with crab crepes and pork belly skewers at their Melrose restaurant, Hatfield's.

Now the husband-and-wife culinary team is poised for a victory lap with The Sycamore Kitchen, opening tomorrow for breakfast and lunch (brunch rolls out in July).

Using almost all house-made ingredients — from bread to sausage to mayonnaise — the cafe proffers delectable dishes and sweets (Karen's a pastry pro) at refreshingly reasonable prices.

Saunter by the baked goods case (salted caramel pecan babka rolls, oatmeal brown butter scones) to order at the counter. Stumptown coffee and rolled buckwheat crepes for breakfast; flank steak sandwich, chopped salad, and ginger limeade for a working lunch.

Grab your meal to go, snag an outdoor patio seat, or plant yourself at a communal table.

Just don't ask your neighbor to move his laptop.

Them's fightin' words.

The Sycamore Kitchen, 143 South La Brea Avenue, between West First and West Second Streets, Mid-City (323-939-0151 or thesycamorekitchen.com).

ODYS + PENELOPE

The newest spot from restaurateurs Karen and Quinn Hatfield is more casual than the now-closed Hatfield's and more high-end than The Sycamore Kitchen, but equally delicious. Charred meats, seafood and veggies, prepared on various wood-burning apparatuses, are at the heart of the eatery. Small plates like creamy coultiflower [$6] and focaccia topped with dandelion greens and ricotta [$7] hit it out of the park. Choose a bottle of the Clelo Chiarli Lambrusco! [$38], a sparkling red not often seen on menus.

POWER MOVE Order the 16-ounce applewood smoked short ribs [$42] to share. The melt-in-your-mouth meat is paired with a delicious housemade dipping sauce. 127 S. La Brea Ave., L.A., 323.939.1033, adysandpenelope.com

The Flagship location carries the Kelly Cole line, as well as a huge inventory of hand-picked vintage items: perfectly distressed blank t-shirts, music tour shirts, boots, jewelry, denim, leather jackets, and more.

A+R

A+R is British ex-pat Andy Griffith, a former film editor and self-avowed design junkie, and Rose Apodaca, a pop culture and style journalist.

In late 2005, they opened a tiny shop in the heart of the Los Angeles creative enclave known as Silver Lake, keen on sharing their excitement for great new design with anyone who would listen. They followed up a year later with their online store.

They love talking about the designers they find locally and from afar, because it only goes to show that this brilliant and bold community is not so much distinguished by geographic or cultural boundaries but bound by the pursuit of aesthetics and innovative ideas.

AETHER Apparel

As outdoor enthusiasts who live in the city, Palmer West and Jonah Smith found shopping options to be extremely limited. They could either go with a flashy performance-driven brand and fell out of place in the city, or go with a design-oriented label and sacrifice outdoor functionality. This wasn't a choice they felt comfortable making; to them design and function should be equal. AETHER utilizes technical fabrics in a more sophisticated form, offering performance outerwear with a refined modern aesthetic. From the city streets to the mountain slopes and everywhere in between.

The Flagship store is designed by Paris-based designer Thierry Gaugain. Store locations include New York and San Francisco.
